

Land that floods shouldn't be developed

I found the front-page article in Saturday's RGJ about the proposed Butler Ranch development in southeast Reno very interesting. In Lemmon Valley, we have been fighting against similar developments for the past couple years. The developers wish to build warehouses, apartments and houses on a property which is still partially underwater from last winter's flooding. While this year's flooding was worse than normal, this property floods most years and should not be developed.
