

Problems of Bay Area already in Reno

Congratulations to Mike Kazmierski, CEO of Economic Development Authority of Western Nevada, on seeing his vision of a "hip" development here in Reno ["Reno doesn't want to be next Silicon Valley," Opinion]. Although he rightly diagnoses many ills of the Bay Area and claims not to want those problems here in Reno, I think he needs to wear a new pair of glasses, obviously not seeing those problems already developing here, plus a few more original to us. Except for an oppressive anti-business government. The planning commission, for instance, seems not to worry about lack of infrastructure, give-away tax benefits to any corporation wanting to bring fame and employment only possibly lasting into the future, and incredible problems staffing and building more schools with good results. Who does he think is funding his dream? Unfortunately, people who do not share his rose-colored kinds of glasses and the dreams they enhance.
